“ Movies tell us that mothers-in-law are scary or mean or just plain difficult to deal with. Carol was none of those things. When I married Jon, I was afraid that she would hate me for taking away her baby boy. Instead, she welcomed me with open arms and loved me as if I were her own. And, in return, I loved her just as much as if she were my blood. Before I married Jon, I never imagined I would ever call my mother-in-law 'mom' because I already had a mom of my own, but I quickly realized that Carol was my mom too, in all the ways that truly mattered. Calling her 'mom' just seemed to fit and make sense. She loved me as if I were her own daughter and never once made me feel like an outsider to her. I loved her deeply and dearly, and always felt so lucky to have her in my life. I relied on her a lot for so much. I knew she always had my back and I knew that if I needed anything (surprising Jon for his 30th birthday, for example), she would be my co-conspirator. I did my best to show her just how much she meant to me, and how valuable and important she was to me, and I hope she always knew that. I felt like the most blessed daughter-in-law and that I had the best mother-in-law in the world... truly she was 'mom' to me too. Now, life seems so much more lonely without her. I miss you, mom...
